n The widespread adoption of electronic products has stimulated the market for electronic documentation. The rise of computer-aided manufacturing (CAM) makes computer-aided design (CAD) more important to the global economy. The application of CAD techniques to industrial design, quality control, and many other processes has the potential to save time, reduce materials waste, and ensure high-quality products. In a world where the widespread adoption of 3D design (3D CAD) applications has the potential to improve the workflow of engineers and architects, the need for CAD software has never been greater. Autodesk () has been offering affordable and reliable CAD software for years. Now, Autodesk has become an even stronger competitor with the introduction of three new software categories: cloud-based, mobile, and Designjet series. The cloud-based software has great potential to become the mainstream CAD software among 3D CAD users. With its affordability, Autodesk on Demand and Autodesk Websites are the preferred choice for most professionals. The cloud-based applications can be accessed and used from any computer with an Internet connection. The cloud-based software is particularly suitable for home use and remote workers. The mobile software supports iOS and Android platforms, and also works on 2D and 3D CAD software on desktop computers. Mobile CAD software helps you access CAD data anytime, anywhere, by accessing any supported device. The mobile software has been successfully tested for Windows Mobile, Android, iOS, and other platforms. The Designjet series is developed by IDM Technology, one of the Autodesk offices, and it consists of three software products: Autodesk Designjet 360 (with a product price of US$ 299), Designjet 360 (with a price of US$ 189), and Designjet 35 (with a price of US$ 99). These Designjet series products are designed to fit 3D CAD and 3D CAM needs for 3D manufacturing and design. They are the perfect solution for CAD workflows where multiple users and data are involved.
